

Create popups and opt-ins with one prompt, with any AI.

Paste it into the AI you already pay for. You get working HTML and CSS, not a mockup you have to fix.

A builder hands you its templates and stops there. The one thing you actually want to change turns out not to be yours to change.

Ask an AI instead and you can have exactly what you pictured. What comes back only looks finished. It takes email addresses that no mail can ever reach. The consent checkbox records nothing. The popup collapses to zero width because of one CSS property nobody warned it about.

This prompt is the rulebook that stops all of that. It is generated from the same specification Emblem Studio enforces when you save, so your AI works from what the platform actually checks rather than from a guess.

It asks you a few things back, then hands you two blocks of code that work on the first paste. It is free, and it works without an Emblem Studio account.
